CARLYLE AND THE TALKER .- An anecdote is going the rounds which is not bad: Carlyle, the man of great thought and of a big head, full of chwarmery, was one day at a very nice dinner party, and doing his duty as a practical philosopher should. Opposite him sat a very rich, pompous, large man, with five wards of shirt-front, and another hig head at the top of it, full, as its pompone owner conceited, of noble thoughts and experience ripened at 4 P M. into grand views and maxims of life. He suc. He looked round at the whole of the company up and down the table to see the favorrable effect he was sure he must have produced, and then addressed himself to Carlyle, thus: "And now that do you really think of touched upon, but briefly, sir, but briefly?" No response followed. The question was repeated, when the big head was raised. Unrlyle regard- Kidd, Master, expected from Shanghai about ed his opposite neighbour vacantly for a the 4th proximo, will be despatched hence on moment, and then in his fine Scotch musical or about the 6th proximo pibroch accent quietly remarked, "You're a poor critter, sir-a poor critter," and so resumed his occupation with the fluids and solids, amidst the glorious mirth of those who enjoyed the wellmerited discomfort-of another. )MMERCIAL INTELLIGENCE.
